Leg. Mont.* (1818) 262 (Jam.).

3. A quantity of drink taken at one time; see below.

Chs.[1] The kiln is filled with damp oats, and when these are sufficiently dry, a fresh lot is put on, a kiln full at a time. When some of the old topers of Mobberley were drinking, they would begin early in the morning, and be drunk before noon. They would call that 'one kill' or 'one kill full,' and would go and lie down and sleep off the effects of the drink, so as to be ready for another 'kill' in an hour or two.

4. v. To dry in a kiln.

2. A gift, commonly a piece of bread, offered at weddings and christenings.

Cor.[1] The term refers to a curious custom which probably at some time was gen., but now exists only at Polperro, as far as I know. When the parties set out from the house to go to the Church, or on their business, one person is sent before them with this selected piece of bread in his or her hand, and the piece is given to the first individual that is met, whose attention has been drawn to the principal parties. I interpret it to have some reference to the idea of the evil eye, and its influence from envy which might fall on the married persons or on the child, and which is sought to be averted by this unexpected gift.

5. In pass.: to enter a church for the first time after any particular event, such as a funeral or child-birth, to be churched.

Sc. For your marriage and your kirkin too Sall baith be in ae day, Jamieson Pop. Ballads (1806) I. 125; A family is also said to be kirkit, the first time they go to church after there has been a funeral in it. Till then it is deemed inauspicious for any of them to work at their ordinary employment (Jam.); After a birth the mother was not permitted to cross the threshold of the door after the hour of sunset till she was 'kirked,' lest the fairies should carry her off to nurse their children, Ford Thistledown (1891) 251. n.Sc. She who has been in childbed it is believed cannot with propriety before she be kirkit enter into the house of her nearest neighbour or most intimate friend. Her unhallowed foot would expose the tenement to some mischance. Some . . . would not taste any food that she had dressed. . . But it is not reckoned necessary that she should be present at any part of divine service. If she set her foot within the walls it is enough, ib. Abd. KISSING, vbl. sb. Var. dial. uses in Sc. Irel. and Eng. Also in form krissin-s.Chs.[1] [ki·sin.] In comb. (1) Kissing-bough, (2) -bunch, (3) -bush, a bunch of holly, evergreens, &c., hung up at Christmas time; see below; (4) -crust, that part of the crust of a loaf which has been joined to another when in the oven; the end crust of a loaf; rough, protuberant crust on a loaf; (5) -day, the first Tuesday after Easter week; see below; (6) -gate, a swing-gate in a V-shaped enclosure, permitting only one person to pass at a time; cf. cuckoo-gate; (7) -ring, (8) -round-the-ring, the game of 'kiss-in-the-ring'; (9) -scab, a sore place on the lips or cheek; (10) -signal, a signal given on the fiddle at a country dance for each man to try and kiss his partner; (11) -strings, strings tied under the chin; (12) -time, the time for kissing at a country dance; see below.

(1) n.Lin.[1] (2) Der. This 'kissing-bunch' is always an elaborate affair. The size depends upon the couple of hoops—one thrust through the other—which forms its skeleton. Each of the ribs is garlanded with holly, ivy, and sprigs of other greens, with bits of coloured ribbons and paper roses, rosy-cheeked apples, . . and oranges. Three small dolls are also prepared . . . and these represent our Saviour, the mother of Jesus, and Joseph. These dolls generally hang within the kissing-bunch, by strings from the top, and are surrounded by apples, oranges tied to strings, and various brightly coloured ornaments. Occasionally, however, the dolls are arranged in the kissing-bunch to represent a manger-scene. . . Gen. a bit [of mistletoe] is obtainable, and this is carefully tied to the bottom of the kissing-bunch, which is then hung in the middle of the house-place, N. & Q. (1877) 5th S. viii. 481. nw.Der.[1] (3) Ir. (A.S.-P.) n.Cy. The kissing bush is formed of mistletoe, evergreens, ribbons and oranges, Denham Tracts (ed. 1895) II. 67. Nhb.[1] Cum.[4] A mass of holly, ivy and other evergreens tied up, gen. in a fanciful shape, and hung up in the kitchen or entrance at Christmas time, and under which it was customary for the lads to kiss the lasses. n.Yks.[4], m.Yks.[1] Lan. Nature Notes, No. 9. ne.Lan.[1] Chs.[1] Mistletoe does not grow in the North. Now, however, it is largely imported . . . from the West of England, and the bush frequently contains a spray of the mystic plant. The kissing-bushes are usually prepared by the farm lads, on Christmas Eve, and they are often tastefully decorated with apples, oranges, and bits of gay-coloured ribbon. I have occasionally seen them made upon a framework of hoop iron, something in the form of a crown, with a socket at the bottom to hold a lighted candle. s.Chs.[1] Gen. of holly and mistletoe, and hung with ribbons, oranges, apples, &c. War.[2] A mistletoe bush, under which a kiss may be lawfully taken at Christmas-tide. A berry should be plucked from it every time a kiss is taken; War.[3] Shr.[1] It dunna look much like Chris'mas, nod a bit o' 'olly an' ivvy, let alone a kissin'-bush. nw.Dev.[1] It consists of a small furze bush, which is dipped in water, powdered with flour, and studded all over with holly-berries. Cor. The kissing-bush that some tall dancer's head had set swaying from the low rafter, 'Q.' Three Ships (1890) v; Flk-Lore Jrn. (1886) IV. 115. (1, a) e.An.[1] Suf.[1] Three small holes are made in the ground, triangularly, about 20 feet apart, to mark the position of as many boys, who each holds a small stick about 2 feet long. Three other boys of the adverse side pitch successively a piece of stick, a little bigger than one's thumb called cat, to be struck by those holding the sticks. On its being struck, the boys run from hole to hole, dipping the ends of their sticks in as they pass, and counting . . . as they do so, up to 31, which is game. Or the greater number of holes gained in the innings may indicate the winners. . . If the cat be struck and caught, the striking party is out, and another of his sidesmen takes his place. . . If there be only 6 players, it may be agreed that three put outs shall end the innings. Another mode of putting out is to throw the cat home, after being struck, and placing . . . it into an unoccupied hole, while the in-party are running. A certain number of misses (not striking the cat) may be agreed on to be equivalent to a put out. The game may be played by two, placed as at cricket, or by four. e.Suf. (F.H.) KITTY, sb.[2] Var. dial. uses in Sc. and Eng. Also in form ketty e.Yks.[1] In comb. (1) Kitty-cat, (a) the game of 'tipcat'; (b) the piece of wood used in 'shinty' and other like games; (2) -cat and buck-stick, a boys' game, see below; (3) -keys, (a) the seeds of the ash-tree; (b) the fruit of the maple; (c) the fruit of the sycamore; (d) the red bunches of fruit of the quickbean; (4) -kyloe, a kitten; (5) -pearty, a name applied to a bright little child; (6) -pussy, a rough sort of hockey played on the ice.

(1, a) e.Dur.[1] (b) Rxb. (Jam.) (2) N.Cy.[1] Nhb. 'Kitty cat and buck stick' was played in the 'Little Croft,' Dixon Whittingham Vale (1895) 269; A ring is drawn and the player stands within it, holding in his hand a small stick called the 'buck-stick.' One of the party acts as 'feeder,' throwing a small piece of wood, called the 'kitty-cat,' towards the player, who strikes at it with his buck-stick. If a good drive is made the player runs to a mark, touching it with his buck-stick, and coming back within the ring before the kitty-cat can be returned. Should the kitty-cat reach the ring before the striker's return he goes out, or should the striker fail to drive the kitty-cat outside the ring, when it is struck he is 'out.' The game is counted by the runs made. A variation of the game is played by all the boys but one having a buck-stick. In this case marks are set up in a circle, one of these being in the 'bay,' in which the lad whose turn it is to strike stands ready. At each of the other marks a lad stands with his buck-stick ready to run. The odd, or 'out,' lad acts as 'feeder,' throwing the kitty-cat to the striker standing ready in the 'bay.' When the kitty-cat is struck the lads run round from mark to mark and the 'feeder' trys to recover the kitty-cat and to touch a lad with it as he is running. If a lad is thus caught out he must take the place of the feeder. The marks for running are usually turned-up sods (R.O.H.); Nhb.[1] (3, a) n.Yks.[14], ne.Yks.[1] e.Yks. (1) Lakel.[2] w.Yks. Among their other accomplishments they were considered champions of knor and spell, CUDWORTH Bradford (1876) 90; (C.A.F.); w.Yks.[2]; w.Yks.[3] The spell is a kind of stage, with three or four iron feet to drive into the ground; on its top is a steel spring, containing a cup for the knor; it is kept down by a 'sneck,' which is tapped by the player with the 'pommel,' when the knor is intended to be struck. Two persons or two sides may play. Each has the same number of strokes, previously agreed upon, and counts 1 for every score of yards he drives the knor. Popular about Dewsbury, &c.; w.Yks.[5] When the 'knor,' after being coated with whitening to render it conspicuous to the 'lookers out' in the distance, is placed in the concave at the end of the spring (held down by a catch), the 'primstick' is taken in hand. . . The standing distance being measured, and the proper elevation of the spring secured by observing the height, the ball leaps when the spring is touched, the final touch comes, and the swinging rap given, which sends the ball flying in the distance. The count is by 'scores,' pegs being fixed at every twenty yards, and the distance thus reckoned.

The afternoon of Good-Friday, in particular, is generally devoted to this game, when players from different towns and villages round about contend with each other. Lan. There's a knurr and spell match to-day, CLEGG Sketches (1895) 275. Shr. At Newport the game of the season was dog-stick or trib and nur, otherwise called knurr and spell, BURNE Flk-Lore (1883) xxiii. (19) Oxf. At Kidlington in Oxon the custom is that on Monday in Witson week there is a fat live lamb provided and the maids of the town, having their thumbs tied behind them, run after it, and she that with her mouth takes and holds the lamb is declared the Lady of the Lamb: which, being dressed with the skin hanging on, is carried on a long pole before the Lady and her companions on the Green, attended with music and a Morris dance of men and another of women; when the rest of the day is spent in dancing, mirth, and glee. The next day the lamb is part baked, part boiled and roast for the Lady's feast, when she sits majestically at the upper end of the tables and her companions with her, with music and other attendants, which ends the solemnity, BLOUNT Jocular Tenures (1784), in STAPLETON Oxf. Parishes (1893) 160; The Lady of the Lamb was common to many villages in this part of Oxf. . . This custom was carried out at Ensham in a slightly different manner. There the prettiest girl of the parish was chosen, and after catching the lamb, she rode, in gay attire, the foremost horse of the team which brought home the lamb. The last girl who rode in the procession at Ensham . . . died subsequently to 1840, STAPLETON ib.; Flk-Lore Jrn. (1886) IV. 107. (20) Dwn. One child sits on a bank and the others come up to her in a long line. The 'old woman' says the first five lines. No question is asked by the 'lady,' she simply takes one child. The 'old woman' shakes hands with this child, and says good-bye to her. When all the children have been 'taken in' . . . the 'old woman' says the other three lines, and so one by one gets all the children back again, GOMME Games (1894) I. 317. I.Ma. ib. 315. Shr., Glo. ib. 316. Brks. The Brks. version is said, not sung, and is played with two leaders, 'old woman' and 'lover.' As the lover chooses a child, that one is sent behind him holding round his waist. . . Finally . . . the game ends in a tug of war, ib. 317.

Som., Dor. 'Here comes the lady of the land, With sons and daughters in her hand. Pray do you want a servant to-day?' &c., Som. and Dor. N. & Q. I. 133, in Gomme ib. 314. Dor. The first Dor. game is played as follows:—The girls are chosen, the one to represent a lady and the other a mother, who is supposed to be taking her children out to service. She has one or more of them in each hand, and leads them up to the lady, saying or singing the first verse. The dialogue then proceeds, and the verse is repeated until all the children are similarly disposed of. A few days are supposed to pass, after which the mother calls to see her children, when the lady tells her she cannot see them. At last ... the children are all 'sat down' behind the lady, and the mother asks one child what the lady has done to her. . . Each one says she has done something to her and made a pie, and when all have told their tale 'they all turn on her and put her to prison.' The second game somewhat differs. One child takes seven or eight others whom she pretends are her children. Another child, presumably a mistress in want of servants, stands at a distance. The first child advances, holding the hand of her children, saying the first verse... This process is gone through again until the mistress has engaged all the children, . . when she is supposed to let them all out to play with the mustard pots, Gomme ib. 317. [A ring is formed, one child in the centre. The ring sing the first verse and then the centre child chooses one from the ring. The chosen pair kiss when the ring has sung the second. The first child then joins the ring and the game begins again, Gomme ib. 322.] [For rhymes, see Gomme, 320–322.] (22) Der. Only three children play, the lover, lady, and fairy. The girl stands a little distance off. The lover says the first four lines, then approaches the lady, falls on one knee, and says the next line. The lady replies and retires further away. The lover then falls on the ground and says the next line. As this is said the good fairy appears, touches the fallen lover with her hand, and he is immediately well again, Gomme ib. 324. Suf. The children form a ring, a boy and girl being in the centre. The gentleman commences by singing the first verse. Then they say alternately the questions and answers. When the gentleman says the lines commencing 'Stab me,' he pretends to stab the lady, who falls on the ground. Then he walks round the lady and sings the last verse . . . and lifts up the lady, ib. 323. [For rhymes see Gomme 313.] (23) Lth. (Jam.) (24) N.Cy.[1] (s.v. Clagham). (25) n.Lin.[1] All but one sit in a circle, and the one who does not, takes a thimble and goes round to each person, and pretends to give it to each one, saying as he does so, 'I give you my lady's thimble; you must hold it fast, and very fast, and very fast indeed.' The thimble is really given to one of the children, and the giver chooses one of the others to guess who has it. Every one in the circle tries to seem as if he or she had it. For every wrong guess a fine is paid. The person who guesses right takes the thimble round the next time. (26) Gall. (A.W.) The lapstone was a flat pebble the cobblers kept on their laps to welt the leather on. Nrf. One of 'em had a bit of leather and t'other a lapstone and all, Emerson Marsh Leaves (1898) 139. Cor.[1]

Hence beating the lapstone, phr., see below.

? Wil. There is a custom of 'beating the lapstone,' the day after Christmas at Nettleton, near Burton. The shoemakers beat the lapstone at the houses of all water-drinkers, in consequence of a neighbour, who had not tasted malt liquor for twenty years, having been made tipsy by drinking only a half pint of ale at his shoemaker's, at Christmas. . . [He said] 'I've only fell over the lapstone, and that has beaten my leg, so I can't walk quite right.' Hence the annual practical joke—'beating the lapstone,' HONE Table-bk. (1827) col. 85, ed. 1838.

Two remedies in use here for the cure of a common complaint, called 'large neck.'. . A common snake, held by its head and tail, is slowly drawn, by some one standing by, nine times across the front part of the neck of the person affected, the reptile being allowed, after every third time, to crawl about for a while. Afterwards the snake is put alive into a bottle, which is corked tightly and then buried in the ground. The tradition is that as the snake decays the swelling vanishes. The second mode of treatment is just the same as the above, with the exception of the snake's doom. In this case, it is killed and its skin, sewn in a piece of silk, is worn round the diseased neck, N. & Q. (1851) 1st S. iii. 405. (6) Cor. (H.G.); It is, or lately was, a custom for the men employed in getting in the corn, to meet in companies on the morning next after the 'harvest-home,' for the purpose of perambulating the neighbourhood of their work, to 'beg a fow-largess.'. . Each party is headed by a 'lord o' th' harvest,' who is generally spokesman for the rest. In most instances 'largess' is very liberally bestowed, both in money and kind, and the total sum collected is divided at the close of the day, HONE Year Bk. (1832) col. 1068. e.An.[1] When they have received it, they shout thrice the words 'halloo largess.' Nrf. It is a general practice on the first day of harvest, for the men to leave the field about four o'clock, and retire to the alehouse, and have what is here termed a 'whet,' that is, a sort of drinking bout... They previously solicit any who happen to come within their sight with, 'I hope, sir, you will please to bestow a largess on us?' If this boon is conceded, the giver is asked if he would like to have his largess halloed; if this is assented to, the hallooing is at his service, HONE Every-day Bk. (1827) II. col. 1166; What larges did you get? (W.H.) Suf. Some children on several different occasions ran by the side of the carriage and cried 'Largesse' (L.D.); (C.T.); During harvest, if any strangers happen to come into the field, they are strongly solicited to make a present to the labourers... This present is called a Largess, and the benefactor is celebrated on the spot by the whole troop, who first cry out, 'Holla! Largess! Holla! Largess!' They then set up two violent screams, which are succeeded by a loud vociferation, continued as long as their breath will serve, and dying gradually away, CULLUM Hist. Hawsted (1813); Suf.[1], e.Suf. (F.H.) Ess. The reapers ask all passengers for a largess; and when any money is given to them, all shout together, 'Largess! largess!' GROSE (1790); Ess.[1] m.Ess. Commonly used by farm-labourers as an appeal to a trespasser. 'I'll thank ye for the larjus,' N. & Q. (1889) 7th S. viii. 517. e. & s.Cy. RAY (1691).

2. The supper provided with the 'largess.'

Nhp.[1] The contributions thus obtained are employed to provide what they call 'the largess,' which is a kind of supper of bread and cheese, pipes and tobacco. A barn is generally the place chosen.

3. Phr. (1) to cry (a) largess, (a) to cry out the word 'largess' in return for a gift of money; see (3); (b) to ask for 'largess'; (2) to drink largess, to drink liquor bought with 'largess'; (3) hallooing (a) largess, the ceremony performed after the gift of largess; see below.

(1, a) e. & s.Cy. Harvestmen cry a largess so many times as there are pence given, RAY (1691). (b) Bdf., Suf. (J.W.B.) (2) Bdf., Suf. (J.W.B.) (3) e.An.[1] The ceremony is called 'hallooing a largess,' and is generally a harsh and discordant yell. Nrf. Supper ended . . . out of doors they go and a hallooing 'largess' commences thus: The men and boys form a circle by taking hold of hands, and one of the party standing in the centre, having a gotch of horkey ale placed near him on the ground, with a horn or tin sort of trumpet in his hand, makes a signal, and 'halloo! larr-r-r-r-r-r-gess' is given as loud and as long as their lungs will allow, at the same time elevating their hands as high as they can and still keeping hold. The person in the centre blows the horn one continued blast, as long as the 'halloo-largess.' This is done three times and immediately followed by three successive whoops; and then the glass, commonly a horn one, of... ale, freely circles. At this time the hallooing largess is generally performed with three times three, HONE Every-day Bk. (1827) col. 1168–9. Suf., Ess. After the Harvest-home feast there still remains the old custom of 'Hallooing Largess.'.. Upon the breaking up of the 'Horkey,' the husbandmen of the farm assemble upon some near eminence or conspicuous place, and lustily call out 'Holla, holla, holla,—Largess.' The 'Holla' they repeat quick, reserving all their strength for the word 'Largess,' and on this word they dwell till their voice is exhausted... They repeat the shout as often as they have received 'largess,' ib. Year Bk. (1832) col. 1070.

4. Comb. (1) Largess-feast, the feast held at the end of the harvest; (2) -money, 'largess' money given to the harvest-men; (3) -money spending, (4) -spending, a gift to reapers in harvest-time; a supper given after the harvest has been got in.

The potatoe . . . was, long afterwards, cultivated with the spade in some by-corner formed into lazy-beds for that purpose, Pennecuik Wks. (1715) 57, ed. 1815. Gall. By the 'lazy-bed' system the ground is trenched more or less deeply in three or four years. Five or six feet wide 'beds' are marked off, on which dung and seed potatoes are planted, with a space of 1½ to 2 ft. between the beds, which forms a trench when the soil is taken out to cover the dung and seed, and to 'back cover' the springing potatoes. By the shifting of the beds and the trenches 1½ or 2 ft. every year, the whole area is trenched in 3 or 4 years (A.W.). Ir. (2) Nhb. The manner of making freemen of Alnwick Common is not less singular than ridiculous. The persons that are to be made free, or as the phrase is, that are to leap the well, assemble in the market-place very early in the morning on the 25th of April, being St. Mark's Day. They are on horseback . . . dressed in white with white night-caps. . . From the market place they proceed in great order, with musick playing before them, to a large dirty pool called the Freemen's Well, on the confines of the common. Here they draw up in a body at some distance from the water and then all at once rush into it and scramble through the mud as fast as they can. . . Dry clothes being ready for them on the other side, they put them on with all possible expedition, and then . . . remount their horses and ride full gallop round the whole confines of the district of which by this achievement they are become free. . . They again enter the town, sword in hand, and are met by women dressed up with ribbons, bells, and garlands of gum-flowers, BRAND Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1813) I. 339; BROCKETT Gl. (1846).

LEE-PENNY, sb. Sc. A charm consisting of a stone set in gold.

w.Sc. This famous charm ... is said to have been brought home by Lochart of Lee, who accompanied the Earl of Douglas in carrying Robert the Bruce's heart to the Holy Land. It ... was credited with the virtue of imparting to water into which it was dipped curative properties, specially influential to the curing of cattle when diseased or preventing them taking disease. Many people from various parts of Scotland whose cattle were affected have made application within these few years for water in which this stone has been dipped. It is believed that this stone cannot be lost. It is still in the possession of the family of Lochart, Napier Flk-Lore (1879) 95.

(3) w.Som.[1] A curious custom prevails, especially in the hill country, of going round to the houses of the principal farmers or the paa'son on the night of Shrove Tuesday. If a door can be found open, or if not, there is a knock—on the door being opened, a man pushes in, and before any resistance can be made empties a sackful of broken crockery and rubbish in the middle of the kitchen. It often happens that either the people forget the day or the custom, and so neglect to fasten their doors; when this is the case the crockery is deposited, and the bearer departs often unrecognized; but when the people are on the watch, and admittance is denied, then sherds and broken pots are thrown. . . The rector of a parish near Exmoor informs me that they always come to his house, and on several occasions the kitchen has seemed half full of crocks and rubbish. In the Vale district these are called Lent-crocks. Dev. N. & Q. (1852) 1st S. v. 77. (4) Som. Sweetman Wincanton Gl. (1885). (6) Shr., Hrf. Bound Provinc. (1876). Wil., Dor. In Dor. the boys sometimes go round in small parties, and the leader having knocked at the door, repeats the following lines: 'I be come a shrovin, Vor a little pankiak, A bit o' bread o' your biakin, Or a little truckle cheese o' your own miakin, If you'll gi' me a little, I'll ax no more, If you don't gi' me nothin, I'll rottle your door.' In case of a refusal, his followers assail the door with a broadside of potsherds. In Wil. the begging is omitted. Dev. The children . . . have a custom of going round to the different houses in the parish, on the Monday before Shrove Tuesday, . . chanting the following verses, by way of extracting from the inmates sundry contributions of eggs, flour, butter, halfpence, &c., to furnish out the Tuesday's feast. 'Lent crock, give a pancake, Or a fritter for my labour, Or a dish of flour, or a piece of bread, Or what you please to render. I see by the latch, There's something to catch; I see by the string, There's a good dame within. Trap, trapping throw, Give me my mumps, and I'll be go,' N. & Q. (1852) 1st S. v. 77; Lent-crocking is a similar sport. . . Parties of young persons would, during Lent, go to the most noted farm-houses, and sing, in order to obtain a crock, Bray Desc. Tamar and Tavy (1836) II. 286. (7) e.Cy. (s.v. LIST, sb.[1] and v.[1] Var. dial. uses in Sc. Irel. and Eng. [list.] 1. sb. The edge or selvedge of flannel or woollen cloth. Cf. listin(g.

w.Yks. (W.T.), n.Lan.[1], nw.Der.[1], se.Wor.[1], Oxf.[1] MS.add., Ken. (D.W.L.), Sur. (L.J.Y.) w.Som.[1] In flannels and in wool-dyed cloths it is usual to have a list or narrow border on each side of the cloth, different in colour from the rest.

Hence (1) Listed, ppl. adj. of flannel or woollen cloth: having an edging woven on each side of the piece; (2) Listen, adj. made of list or the edge of selvedge of flannel or woollen cloth.

(1) w.Som.[1] Also the width of a piece of cloth. Thus narrow and broad cloths are still called 'narrow-listed' or 'broad-listed,' in reference to the breadth of the cloth itself, and quite irrespective of the 'list' or stripe, which may or may not be upon each side of the piece. (2) nw.Der.[1] Listen shoon. Som. JENNINGS Dial. w.Eng. (1869).

2. The rim or edge of a pulley which prevents the belt or band from slipping off. w.Yks.[2]

3. A stripe or streak; the close, dense streak seen in heavy bread; a layer, stratum.

n.Yks. One bay guelding with a black list and a white rache down his face, Quart. Sess. Rec. (July 30, 1689) in N. R. Rec. Soc. III. 99. Shr.[1] I canna tell w'ether it's the faut o' the flour or the barm, but the bread hanna ruz well—jest look whad a list is all alung the bottom o' the loaf. Glo.[1] Hrt. A black bull with a brown list upon his back, ELLIS Mod. Husb. (1750) III. i. Hmp.[1] A line or band of sand is so called (s.v. Lissen). Dor. I have never tasted such rough bread. . . There's a list at bottom o' the loaf as thick as the sole of one's shoe, HARDY Mayor of Casterbridge (ed. 1895) 41. Som. J. L. in digging a well came to a leest of black earth four or five inches thick (W.F.R.). Dev.[1]

Hence Listy, adj. applied to bread, when heavy and streaked owing to insufficient baking. s.Wor.[1]

4. v. To measure the width of cloth from selvedge to selvedge, during milling, to ascertain when it is milled or shrunk to the width required.

w.Som.[1] Thick piece don't milly suant, hon I come to [lús-n] list it, I vound a sight o' differ'nce in places.

5. To shake or stretch out the piece of cloth from the wrinkled and tumbled state into which it gets during the process of milling.

w.Som.[1] In order to make the cloth 'mill' evenly, it has to be listed several times. This is usually done by pleating the cloth upon a bar fixed for the purpose.

[1. Lyste of clothe, lisiere, PALSGR.; Lyyst of clothe, forago, Prompt. OE. līste, a hem, border, selvage (B.T.).]

3. pl. Phr. lits and gerts, a boys' game; see below.

w.Yks. Common thirty years ago. It was a species of gambling, but required skill. The term 'Lits and gerts' was applied to small and large pieces of old brass. The sizes of the pieces of metal played for, varied from thin bits ½ an inch square, such as clog clasps, up to quarter pound pieces of broken brass machinery bearings. But there was one important variation which served to make what would otherwise have been a lit, into a gert. Where any letter or inscription was discernible this was called a gert quite apart from size or weight. A flat bare piece of ground was used: here a thin stone, 5 or 6 inches square, was propped on its edge—this was known as the gol. Behind the gol the player placed the stakes—so many lits and gerts each. Then each player in turn stood on a mark about 6 yards away from the gol, and with a round stone quoit pitched at the gol. The player aimed so that he might drive the gol away, and place his stone on the pile of lits and gerts. After all the players had pitched, an examination was made, and the players claimed all the lits and gerts which lay nearest to their stone quoits, unless such pieces were nearer the gol, in which case the players pitched again, until the gol had been driven from its position of ownership (S.P.U.); 'Lits' retained only in the game of lits ən gəts, lit. littles and greats, a game played by boys with brass buttons, clog clasps, or small pieces of brass of any kind. Two lits have the value of one gəət, Wright Gram. Wndhll. (1892) 53.

Nhp.[2] The common fields in most parishes were divided into livings. Wil., Dor. Many parishes . . . were formerly divided after the following fashion: . . A certain number, say twenty-two 'livings.' Each of these had originally a small farm-house, a mead, a few acres of coppice, and about twenty-four acres of arable, scattered in small slips of one to four acres over three large fields, called tenantry fields. Besides this each living had four 'cow leases,' . . also a right to turn forty sheep upon the common down. Also each holder of a 'living' had the right to let his cattle and pigs run 'at shack' over the whole of the tenantry fields after harvest. . . The glebe consisted of two livings. In process of time these livings became consolidated into larger farms, and ultimately the operation of the Enclosures Acts put an end to this curious state of things, N. & Q. (1867) 3rd S. xi. 126. Dev. A small farm (K., s.v. Berton).

Of oatmeal, 240 lbs, ib.; Chs.[1] A load of potatoes consists of three bushels of 84 lbs. each, or 252 lbs., that is, 12 score 12 lbs., or twelve long scores of 21 lbs. each, the score answering to a local peck. Potatoes are also sold by the score, and by the half-load hamper. A load of wheat consists of four measures, and varies in weight in different localities. In some places it is customary to sell 70 lbs. for a measure; in other places the measure contains 75 lbs., and again in others 80 lbs. These different customs prevail in almost contiguous parishes; so that in selling wheat it is always necessary to specify how much a measure is to weigh, and the load is 14, 15, or 16 scores, according as the measure weighs 70, 75, or 80 lbs. But taking Chs. generally, the load of 14 scores is the most in use for wheat. A load of barley, beans, Indian corn, or Indian meal weighs 240 lbs.; Chs.[3] Three bushels, or a measure of fifteen score. Der. LOBBER, sb.[1] Irel. [lo·bər.] A game, see below; a player in the game. See Lob, v.[2] 2.

There are three or more players on each side, two stones or holes as stations, and one lobber. The lobber lobs either a stick, about three inches long, or a ball, . . while the batsman defends the stone or hole with either a short stick or his hand. Every time the stick or ball is hit, the boys defending the stones . . . must change places. Each one is out if the stick or ball lodges in the hole or hits the stone; or if the ball or stone is caught; or if it can be put in the hole or hit the stone while the boys are changing places. This game is also played with two lobbers, that lob alternately from each end. The game is won by a certain number of runs, Flk-Lore Jrn. (1884) II. 264, in GOMME Games (1894) I. 331.

Build it up with penny loaves. Penny loaves would be eaten away. Build it up with silver and gold. Silver and gold would be stolen away. Get a man to watch all night. If the man should fall asleep? Set a dog to bark all night. If the dog should meet a bone? Set a cock to crow all night. If the cock should meet a hen? Here comes my Lord Duke, And here comes my Lord John; Let everyone pass by but the very last one And catch him if you can.' The children form a circle by joining hands. They march round and round, singing the verses to a sing-song tune. When singing, 'If the cock should meet a hen,' they all unclasp hands; two hold each other's hands and form an arch. The rest run under, saying the last verse. The 'arch' lower their hands and try to catch the last child, Gomme ib. 339–41. Lan. Many an evening was beguiled with snapdragon, . . London Bridge, Harland & Wilkinson Flk-Lore (1867) 255. Shr. The players form a ring, moving round as they sing the chorus; two players outside the ring run round it, singing the 'verse part.' 2. A game; see below.

Lon. A diagram is drawn on a slate and two children play. A piece of paper, or small piece of glass or china, called a 'chipper,' is used to play with. This is placed at the bottom of the plan, and if of paper, is blown gently towards the top; if of glass or china, it is nicked with the fingers. The first player blows the paper, and in whichever space the paper stops makes a small round o with a slate pencil, to represent a man's head. The paper or 'chipper' is then put into the starting-place again, and the same player blows, and makes another 'man's head' in the space where the paper stops. This is continued until all the spaces are occupied. If the paper goes a second time into a space already occupied by a 'head,' the player adds a larger round to the 'head,' to represent a 'body'; if a third time, a stroke is drawn for a leg, and if a fourth time, another is added for the second leg; this completes a 'man.' If three complete men in one space can be gained, the player makes 'arms'; that is, two lines are drawn from the figures across the space to the opposite side of the plan. This occupies that space, and prevents the other player from putting any 'men' in it, or adding to any already there. When all the spaces are thus occupied by one player, the game is won. Should the paper be blown on to a line or outside the plan, the player is out; the other player then begins, and makes as many 'men' in her turn, until she goes on a line or outside. Should the paper go into 'London' [the space at the top of the plan outside the ruled lines], the player is entitled to make a 'head' in every space, or to add another mark to those already there, Gomme Games (1894) I. 332–3.

A pair of these bent poles are kept about two feet apart and parallel to each other by five or more rungs. A frame so constructed forms one crook, and a pair of these pairs are slung on the pack-saddle, pannier-wise. When in position the long ends of the crooks are upright, and are at least three feet above the horse's back. Being over five feet asunder, a very large quantity of hay, straw, or corn can be loaded on a pack-horse. . . Faggot wood is also carried on horseback in long crooks. 2. An instrument used in playing a game of chance; see below. Cf. lorrimer.

w.Yks.[3] An instrument marked with signs, a sort of tee-to-tum, . . . something like a short ruler with eight sides; occasionally they have but four. On one side are ten X's or crosses, forming a kind of lattice work; on the next to the left three double cuts, or strokes, passing straight across in the direction of the breadth; on the third a zigzag of three strokes one way, and two or three the other, forming a W with an additional stroke, or a triple V; on the fourth, three single bars, one at each end, and one in the middle as in No. 2, where they are doubled. Then the four devices are repeated in the same order. The game, formerly popular at Christmas, can be played by any number of persons. Each has a bank of pins, or other small matters. A pool is formed. Then in turn each rolls the long Lawrence. If No. 1 comes up the player cries 'Flush,' and takes the pool; if No. 2, he puts down two pins; if No. 3, he says 'Lave all,' and neither takes nor gives; if No. 4, he picks up one. . . It has been suggested that the name Lawrence may have arisen from the marks scored on the instrument, not unlike the bars of a gridiron, on which the Saint perished.

LOWBELL, sb.[1] Brks.[1] [lau·bel.] See below.

A bell formerly rung at villages in the Vale of Berkshire at daybreak by the herdsman appointed to take charge of cows to be turned out on the downs for grazing during the day. At the sound of the 'low bell' the cows were delivered to him.

LOWBELL, v. and sb.[2] Nhp. War. Wor. Also in forms loobell War.; lubell War. Wor. [lou·-, lū·bel.] 1. v. To publicly express disapprobation of any one in a particular manner; see below.

Nhp. The neighbours . . . expressed great indignation at his most disreputable conduct, and they in consequence determined to put him to open shame by 'lowbelling' him in front of his cottage in the evening, when all the old pots and kettles in the village were put in requisition and a continual discord was kept up for two or three hours, by way of administering him a wholesome punishment for his breaking of the marriage vows, Nhp. Herald (Apr. 16, 1853) in N. & Q. (1853) 1st S. vii. 586; Nhp.[1] A mode of expressing the ridicule and censure of the neighbourhood, upon a man and his wife, who have repeatedly disgraced themselves by quarrelling and fighting. The neighbours, men, women and boys, proceed round the village with tin kettles, cow's horns, &c.; and to the rough music thus produced are added the shouts and vociferations of the attendant crowd, which are redoubled as they pass the door of the offending party; Nhp.[2] When a peasant has committed any glaring breach of good morals, it is customary for his neighbours to lowbell him. On the first appearance of the culprit in 'strit,' or on 'grin,' the villagers rise en masse, and greet him with a terrible din of tin pots and kettles, &c.; and amidst the hooting and vociferation of the multitude he is generally compelled to seek shelter by flight. War. The inhabitants of a town were stated to have given vent to their indignant feelings against one of the respondents by loobelling him, which operation was explained to mean 'that they assailed him with pots and pans and smashed all his windows.' It was said to be peculiar to that part of the county, viz. Marston Priors, N. & Q. (1883) 6th S. viii. 228. War., Wor. This punishment is rarely resorted to except in cases of infidelity. Within the last two or three years I have known of its being twice inflicted (E.S.).

Hence Lowbeller, sb. one who takes part in the process of 'lowbelling.' Nhp.[2]

2. sb. One who takes part in the process of 'lowbelling.' Nhp.[2]

LUBIN, sb. In gen. dial. use in Sc. Irel. and Eng. Also in forms looby Ant. w.Yks.[2] War.[3]; looping Nhb.; luby Not. Suf. A children's game; see below.

Sc. A ring is formed. One sings and the rest join, to the tune of 'Lillibullero,' the first line. As soon as this is concluded, each claps his hand and wheels grotesquely, singing the second line. They then sing the third line, suiting the action to the word, still beating the time; then the second again, wheeling round and clapping hands. When they say 'A' feet in, and nae feet out,' they all sit down with their feet stretched into the middle of the ring, GOMME Games (1894) I. 359. Ant. Belfast, ib. 358. Nhb. At Hexham: 'Here we come looping looping [louping], Looping all the night,' ib. Prob. the oldest and original form, ib. 360. w.Yks. At Epworth, Doncaster: 'Here we go lubin loo, Here we go lubin li, Here we go lubin loo Upon a Christmas night,' ib. 358; 'Here we come dancing looby, Lewby, lewby, li.' At Eckington the children first pretend to wash their hands, then their faces, while singing the words; then comb their hair and brush their clothes; then they join hands and dance round in a ring singing, . . suiting their actions to the words sung, ib. 359; w.Yks.[2] A circle is formed by a number of children, who take hold of each other's hands and sing: 'Can you dance, looby looby, All on a Friday night? You put your right foot in, And then you take it out, And wag it, and wag it, and wag it, Then turn and turn about.' At the third line they put their right feet within the ring, then they take their feet out and turn round. Not. Here we dance luby, luby, Here we dance luby light, Here we dance luby, luby, All on a Wednesday night, GOMME ib. War.[3] Here we dance 'looby, looby,' Old Sng. Oxf. GOMME ib. 353-5. Lon. ib. 360. Nrf. ib. 353. Suf. How do you luby lue [repeat 3 times] O'er the Saturday night? GURDON Cty. Flk-Lore, 64, in GOMME ib. 357. Dor. The Dor. version is played by the children taking hands in pairs, forming a ring and dancing round, GOMME ib. 359. [A ring is formed and the children dance round, singing, 'Here we dance lubin, lubin, lubin, Here we dance lubin light.'. . They then stand still, sing the next verse ('Put all the right hands in, Take all the right hands out,' &c. &c.), and while singing, suit the action to the word, each child turning herself rapidly round when singing the last line. Another way of playing is that the children do not dance round and round. They form a ring by joining hands, and then they all move in one direction, about half way round, while singing the first line, 'lubin'; then back again in the opposite direction, while singing the second line 'light,' still keeping the ring form, and so on for the third and fourth lines, ib. 359; It is just possible that 'lubin' may be a corruption of some animal name, such as 'lupus,' or 'lapin'; but we are more inclined to suggest that 'louping' is a modern gloss (like

'Please the pigs' for 'Please the pyx'), and that the game alludes not to an animal, or to leaping, but to the house-spirit, Milton's 'lubber-fiend,' Spectator (Mar. 2, 1895) 301, col. 2.]

LYKE-WAKE, sb. Sc. n.Cy. Nhb. Yks. Also written like-wake Sc. n.Yks.[1]; and in forms laik-wake Hdg.; lake-wake N.Cy.[1] Nhb.[1] n.Yks.[3]; late-wake Sc. n.Cy. Nhb.[1]; lay-quake Nhb.[1]; lyik-wake Nhb.[1]; lyk-wake Sc. w.Yks. The watch held over the dead between the time of death and burial. See Lichwake (s.v. Lich).

Sc. The late-wake is a ceremony used at funerals. The evening after the death of any person, the relatives and friends of the deceased meet in the house, attended by bag-pipe or fiddle; the nearest of kin . . . opens a melancholy ball, dancing and greeting; . . . and this continues till daylight; but with . . . gambols . . . among the younger part of the company. . . If the corpse remain unburied for two nights, the same rites are renewed, Pennant Tour (1769) 112 (Jam.); I may be streekit here or night.—There will be few, few at Meg's like-wake, Scott Guy M. (1815) liii. n.Sc. Ye'll gar him cry your dead lyke-wake, Buchan Ballads (1828) I. 181, ed. 1875. Bnff. Gordon Chron. Keith (1880) 63. Abd. On the occasion of the lyke-wake, a portion of the Bible was generally read and psalms were sung, and as there were refreshments both in meat and drink, it not unfrequently happened, when the watchers were not religiously disposed, that the decorum necessary on such occasions was not observed, Paul Abd. (1881) 51. Frf. Tammas, without taking anyone into his confidence, determined to treat Chirsty as dead, and celebrate her decease in a 'lyke wake.' . . For three days before the burial the friends and neighbours of the mourners were invited into the house to partake of food and drink by the side of the corpse. The dead lay on chairs covered with a white sheet. Dirges were sung and the deceased was extolled, but when night came the lights were extinguished, and the corpse was left alone, Barrie Licht (1888) xi. Per. Great profanities that customary are used at lykewakes by certain profane persons, Spottiswoode Misc. (1844) II. 310. Ayr. The same night . . . the body was removed to Mr. Mutchkin's brewhouse, where the lads and lasses kept the late-wake, Galt *Ann. LYMM, sb. Chs. Phr. (1) Lymm greys, the inhabitants of Lymm; see below; (2) to lick up anything like Lymm hay, to eat anything as though it were especially good; (3) to pull anything Lymm from Warburton, to pull anything completely to pieces.

(1) Chs.[1] In former (cock-fighting) days, different townships were called after the peculiar breed of their fighting cocks; by which afterwards, and to this day, the inhabitants are designated. Thus we have 'Lymm Greys.' (2) Grose (1790); Chs.[1] 'Lim is a village on the river Mersey that parts Cheshire and Lancashire, where the best hay is gotten.' Hence anything superexcellent is likened to Lymm hay. (3) Chs.[1] The expression originates from the fact that the church livings of Lymm and Warburton were formerly held together, but that they were eventually separated, and the income of the rectors of Lymm thereby reduced.
